Commentary and Statistics

- U.S. equities, as well as oil, experienced a relatively flat week as the earnings season continued to wind down. Gold finished higher after reaching a threemonth high during the period. The 10-year U.S. Treasury yield closed at approximately 2.32%.
- President Donald Trump said that a tax plan is nearly finalized, but it may not come until a health care proposal is presented next month. President Trump did not provide any specifics regarding tax reform, including the controversial border adjustment provision in the House Republican plan. Border adjustment would exempt income earned from exports, but tax imports at the (new lower) corporate rate.
- The release of the January Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) minutes noted that many participants expect that it might be appropriate to raise the funds rate again fairly soon, if incoming information on the labor market and inflation is in line with or stronger than forecast.
- Not surprisingly, the biggest takeaway from the FOMC minutes seemed to be the heightened uncertainty surrounding fiscal policy. Most participants noted that some time would likely be required for the outlook to become more clear.
- The minutes also expressed concern that the low level of implied volatility in equity markets seems inconsistent with the meaningful uncertainty surrounding policy outlook. Finally, the minutes did not contain any meaningful discussion surrounding the balance sheet. They noted that participants generally agreed that the Fed should begin discussions about the conditions that could warrant changes in the existing reinvestment policy, as well as how those changes would be implemented and communicated.

If terminated and other accounts had been included, results may have differed from that shown. <sup>3</sup> Metrics are pooled and separately-managed institutional portfolios that fall within our traditional long-only commercial book of business that remain open as of 12/31/16.
